ON the 25th of March, 1846, the following notice appeared in the National Intelligencer, and was extensively circulated by the newspaper press throughout the country :

House of Representatives, March 24, '46.

With a view to furnish correct information in regard to the character, prices, and extent of American manufactures, as well as to correct misrepresentations on that subject, the undersigned respectfully invite the artisans, mechanics, and manufacturers of the United States to send specimens of their various productions, with their prices, to be compared with the British manufactures sent from Manchester, and now being exhibited in the room of the "Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads," to influence the action of Congress in relation to the proposed modification of the tariff.

ANDREW STEWART,	JOHN STROHM,

JAMES BUFFINGTON,

On a further consideration of the subject, it was thought advisable to adopt an enlarged and systematic plan for a general exhibition of the products of domestic industry, falling properly under the denomination of American manufactures, and the following gentlemen were requested to act as a committee to carry out and conduct such an exhibition, viz :

WILLIAM W. SEATON,	Washington,	WILLIAM EASBY,	Washington,
THOMAS P. JONES,	do.	JOHN F. CALLAN,	do.
JOHN W. MAURY,	do.	JAMES LYONS,	Richmond, Virginia,

The committee immediately gave notice by a circular address, of which the following is a copy, of the object of their appointment, and invited the co-operation of manufacturers therein :

THE NATIONAL FAIR.

C I R C U L A R

Of the Committee of Superintendence of the National Exhibition of American Manufactures and products of Mechanical Art,

AT THE CITY OF WASHINGTON, IN MAY, 1846.

Many persons friendly to the permanency of the present protective system, and others, who, without being committed to its support, desire information in reference to its effects, have suggested the importance of procuring an exhibition of American Manufacturing and Mechanical Products, to be made at the seat of government at as early a period, during the present spring, as the opportunities for accomplishing such a project might allow. It is believed that an exhibition, embracing specimens of every kind of handicraft or manufacturing skill employed in the nation, or at least all such specimens as may be conveniently procured for the occasion, together with the prices at which they may be purchased, and the names of those by whom they are fabricated, would embody, in an impressive form, a mass of useful facts which could not fail to be appreciated, as they deserve, by the public authorities upon whom rests the responsibility of sustaining the prosperity of the great interests connected with this subject; and that such facts, collected from the daily transactions of the people, authenticated by the personal examinations of all who choose to inspect them, would furnish incontrovertible arguments in favor of that industry, which so greatly honors as well as enriches the mechanics of America.

A recommendation of a similar exhibition by the National Institute, two years ago, met with a high degree of favor from the public at that period; and the success of such an effort now may, it is hoped, lead to its regular adoption hereafter, as a means of presenting, at suitable intervals, a visible demonstration of the advance of the country in those arts upon which its prosperity so greatly depends.

At a consultation recently held by many members of the present Congress—gentlemen of both political parties—the proposition of inviting such an exhibition as we have referred to was considered and adopted, as an enterprise of eminent utility at this time, and with a confidence that it would find a hearty assent from the friends of national industry throughout the whole Union. To give efficacy to this proposition they have nominated the undersigned as a general committee of superintendence, and have charged them with the duty of presenting the subject to the country at large, of inviting the aid of the friends of national industry to the scheme, and of making such preparations as may be necessary to render the exhibition as full and as effective as the time allowed will permit.

Thus summoned to this labor from a source so amply entitled to the respect and confidence of the nation, and fully concurring in the importance attached to the subject, the undersigned have not hesitated to comply with the wishes of those by whom they have been put in requisition, and promptly to enter upon the duties consigned to them. In the performance of these duties they invoke the earnest co-operation of all who may have any thing to contribute to the proposed exhibition, hoping, that this invitation will be answered in such a manner as shall enable the committee to present such a display of the work of our artizans as shall adequately attest the great skill and perfection to which our country has attained in manufacturing and mechanical art.

The committee propose that the exhibition shall be opened at Washington, on the 20th day of May, 1846, previous to which date ample provision will be made for the reception, security, and suitable disposition of all specimens which may be sent to their care.

They invite the transmission of specimens of every kind of manufacture and handicraft known to the artizans of the United States, and desire that the price, as well as the maker's name, be furnished with each article intended for exhibition. Committees will be appointed for the superintendence and arrangement and preservation of all parcels sent to the exhibition rooms.

The rooms will be ready to receive articles for exhibition from and after the 1st day of May. The exhibition will be kept open not less than two weeks.

Owners of parcels exhibited during the exhibition will, unless directions to the contrary be given, be expected to allow the sale of such parcels at the prices marked, to be delivered at the close of the exhibition.

All goods intended for exhibition can be directed to Mr. David A. Hall, secretary of the committee, who will see to their safe-keeping, and attend to their being repacked after the close of the exhibition.

In case of a sale of them, the money will be duly transmitted.

As there will be many goods undisposed of which the proprietors may not desire to have returned, and prefer to have sold for their benefit, the committee will cause a sale at auction of such articles as the owners may desire to have so disposed of.

Motive power will be furnished at the exhibition rooms for such machinery as may require it.

As the committee can only give this general invitation to the manufacturers and artizans of the country, each one will be pleased to consider it addressed to himself individually.

Editors of papers throughout the country, friendly to the object, are respectfully requested to give this circular a few insertions.

Signed by the Committee.

Washington, D. C., March 28, 1846.

It was early perceived that no room or building could be had in the city of Washington, of sufficient capacity to accommodate the mass of articles to be presented. The committee proceeded, therefore, without any loss of time, to erect on a public lot, under permission from the city authorities, a building, 300 feet in direct length, with wings or side sections of 100 feet each, making an entire building of 500 feet in length, by 60 feet in breadth. It was erected in less than three weeks; and though constructed of rough timber, presented a handsome architectural exterior.

The roof was covered with thick cotton cloth, rendered impervious to water by a coating of paint, and was lined within—both the sides and ceilings, with white and colored muslins, so disposed upon the columns and long ranges of tables, as to add greatly to the beauty of the interior of the building.

The edifice was lighted in the day by numerous sky-lights in the roof, and at night by ranges of gas burners, extending the whole length of the structure, and by lamps furnished with fine oil.

The accommodations for the display of goods consisted of fifty-eight tables, of sixteen feet in length by six feet in width, and of a continuous side table, extending, with slight interruptions, around the entire building, and of two sheds running the whole length, outside of the main building.

A steam engine of about twenty horse power, obligingly furnished by Col. Capron, from the Laurel Factory, Maryland, was erected on the premises, and served to propel the various kinds of machinery presented for exhibition. Nothing at the Fair more gratified the enlightened curiosity of visitors than the busy machinery thus set in motion.

Such were the arrangements which the committee deemed it advisable to make, for the reception and display of the various articles of American manufacture and handicraft art.—They were not without apprehensions that these preparations were on too large a scale for the place and occasion; and at times, doubted even whether the magnitude of the building would not render more obvious the insignificance of the display they should be enabled to make. But these doubts were not of long duration.

About the 15th of May, goods began to arrive from various parts of the country; and before the 20th, such an amount had been received, that a contrary apprehension was felt, and the committee began to cast about to see whether their building could be enlarged, or an additional one erected. Their fear then was, that they should not have room enough.

The goods were classified and tastefully arranged on the tables, by Mr. Rowland Ellis, of Boston, a man every way qualified, by experience and natural capacity, for that duty; and at 12 o'clock, on the 21st of May, under the firing of a National Salute, the American Flag was unfurled over the building, and the doors were thrown open.

The public expectation had been greatly excited, and eager multitudes thronged the door for admission.

Cards of invitation were, by direction of the committee, addressed to the entire body of the members of Congress, to the president of the United States, the heads of departments, the resident foreign ministers, the clergy and the editorial corps, either resident or temporarily sojourning in the city of Washington.

The Fair was kept open with undiminished interest, from the 21st of May till the 3d day of June, and was visited, it is believed, by not less than 60,000 persons.

The committee think they may, without arrogance, pronounce this to have been the most magnificent and satisfactory display of the products of American industry, that has yet been made. In the minuter articles of fancy work—articles which contribute greatly to the effect of a public display, other exhibitions may have rivalled this; but in the substantial fabrics that minister to the wants of man in every walk of life, which attest most truly the progress of manufacturing art, and which are most essential to independence of foreign countries, this is believed to stand unsurpassed in this country.

It is with great satisfaction that the committee refer to the various sections of the country which, by their productions, were represented in this national exhibition. It is no longer the East and the North that claim an exclusive knowledge of the mysteries of the spinning-jenny, or of the magic speed of the shuttle. The South also asserts her progress in these arts, and is enabled to point to her power-looms and factories, which weave into cloth the snowy tissue of her lands upon the very fields where it is produced.

It is not the purpose of the committee, in this brief report, or in the catalogue which follows, to particularize and discriminate as to the relative merits of the various articles presented, nor can they, without an arrogance which would not fail of its just rebuke, assume to do so; yet, as the impression prevails so generally, that the North alone is the manufacturing portion of the country, they would respectfully draw attention to those articles of southern fabrication which are enumerated in their list.

If the elder looms of Lowell and Waltham produce finer articles, a Virginian who takes a pride in the progress of art in his own state, may well point to the strong and serviceable fabrics which come from the looms of Richmond and Petersburg, and which will compare favorably, both in price and style of finish, with those of the like class from the North.

Very creditable samples of cotton cloth from the Rockfish Manufacturing Company of North Carolina, at Fayetteville, were exhibited, and a fine style of cotton and woollen goods manufactured by George Schley, Esq., of Georgia, intended for the Indian trade, were produced; these, with the samples of iron from Georgia and Virginia, and especially of cast steel from the latter state, attest that there is in the mines and broad lands of these states, a wealth which, under a wise legislation, the labor of their hands may profitably develope.

The display of cotton goods, both of the fine and more substantial articles of printed calicoes and ginghams, was very ample. The old and long established mills of New-England were fully represented. Fabrics of great beauty, from the steam factories at Lowell, Newburyport and Providence, were much admired; nor was less attention drawn to the fine shirtings from the New-York Mills, near Utica. Cottons from the new steam mills near Philadelphia, and printed calicoes from the neighborhood of that city, and from a great number of the print works in other parts of the country, exhibited a progress in the art, of dying and fancy coloring, which leaves foreign artisans little to boast in the comparison.

Of the progress that has been made in the manufacture of the great staple of this country, a striking proof was exhibited in the production of a sample [about six yards,] of cotton muslin, of British manufacture, sold in Boston in 1813, at 85 cents a yard, by the bale. The same goods would not sell now for more than six cents a yard. Though the state of war then existing may account for the very high price of the goods at that period, yet every American, who values the prosperity of his own country, will rejoice that no such advance in price could take place again, from such a cause, though his country were at war with all the world.

In woollen goods the display was equally satisfactory; in articles of iron and steel; of agricultural implements, fine cutlery and military equipments; of leather in its raw state, in the form of shoes, boots, saddlery, and harness gear, and in fine, in almost all the departments of industry, there was such an exhibition as must have satisfied the most skeptical of the ability of our countrymen to manufacture, to the extent of the entire wants of the country.

Not the least gratifying portion of the exhibition was that which consisted of the operations of spinning by machinery, and of weaving by the power-loom. By the aid of the steam engine several looms were put in motion. But no machine propelled by this power excited so universal admiration as that for setting card teeth, by which, with the simple materials of a coil of wire and a strip of leather, cotton cards were produced with astonishing rapidity. If intelligence could be infused into inert matter, it might readily be believed by those who witnessed the action of this machine, that its inventor was the person to realize the miracle.

The committee submit herewith a list of the articles exhibited, which, though not perfect, is as complete as the circumstances under which it was taken would allow. It was their hope that the ample notices circulated through the newspaper press, would have obviated the necessity of such a catalogue, and it was not till an advanced period of the Fair that it was made. As heretofore intimated, it was not the purpose of the committee to discriminate as to the merits of the goods produced; that delicate task they could not assume. They aim simply to enumerate the articles of which the exhibition was composed, and give the contributors the satisfaction of knowing that their own articles helped to swell the aggregate so much admired.

In the hope that this exhibition has served, in some degree, to enlighten the public mind in regard to one of the great interests of the country, this report and the accompanying list are respectfully submitted by the committee.

By order,
D. A. HALL, Secretary.

Wm. W. SEATON, Chairman.
